

The first global auditable innovation management standard is coming – are you ready?

In 2024, the first global auditable innovation management standard (ISO 56001) will launch. If you're an organisation who wants a strategic advantage, you'll need to start preparing quickly to be ready...

ISO 56002 is a document that contains some informative tips and elements to assist your preparations for ISO 56001 when it launches, including:

Progression of Innovation

Does your organisation have established, adoptable processes that allow for innovation initiatives?

All innovation activities need to be managed, whether that leads to a small, incremental change or something more radical.

ISO 56002 provides a comprehensive list of aspects of the IMS that organisations need to consider when managing innovation activities, including:

- Scope – for the innovation activities.
- Indicators – the measures to inform decision making and evaluate against.
- Leadership – to empower and encourage all bodies within the IMS.
- Team – to contribute to key decisions and add value to the innovation initiatives.
- Decisions – how and who should be making the final call?
- Roles – should be clearly defined and people should understand how critical their part is.
- Early asset capture – to protect the intellectual property you are building.
- Auditing and learning – take stock of and capture feedback to keep developing the IMS.

When agreeing on these aspects, input should be sought across all disciplines within your organisation, to gain different perspectives.

We are here to help you can work with you to develop the structure of your innovation management system, to help you thrive against the competition.

Interested in finding out more? Let's talk.